Provincial Packing.

Pledges of support and cooperation in the present na tional emergency have been sent to Prime Minister Mac Kenzie King by several pro vincial governments. In time it is expected that every province will follow this example. The attitude of the various governments have been expressed as follows:

Alberta – Effective Canadian support for Britain in the war was called for by Premier Aberhart in a statement issued last week on behalf of a caucas of federal social credit members and the Alberta cabinet.

One resolution adopted unanimously urged that the ('anadian government create and issue without borrowing the financial credit necessary for Canada's share in the war, this egurse to be accompanied by definite price regulations to prevent any serious inflationary rises in prices, It was pointed out that this course would eliminate devastating after-effects caused by an increased debt burden.

Another resolution proposed the conscription of material and financial resources before the conscription of individual manpower. In this way it could be hoped to secure 'the greatest possible equalization of sacrifice."

Saskatchewan - Assurance of the United support of govern ment and the people in any plan the fedtral government may evolve to give effective co operation to Great Britain was promised by Premier W. J. Patterson.

Manitoba-Premier Bracken in expressing the co-operali-n of the people of Manitoba, said the federal government could count upon their assistance in any plans that may be made "for the defence of freedom and the settlement of international disputes, without resort to force."

British Columbia—The provincial government will cooperate with the Ottawa government in any way possible. This assurance was wired by Premier T, D. Pattullo.

A Worthy Cause

The stirring appeal which has been sounded during the past few months for financial support to ensure continued maintenance of Jack Miner's bird sanctuary in Eastern Canada should strike a responsive chord in the breast of every lover of wild life and of every true sportsman on the entire contior every lover of wild life and of every true sportsman on the entire continent.

When it is remembered that Jack Miner, at great personal sacrifice to himself and family, has done pioneer work in bird banding for a long period of years resulting in valuable information which has made conservation of game birds on present day scale possible, it is not too much to suggest that his work is deserving of recognition in a practical way, at least to the extent that will enable the work to be carried on. It would not be going too far afield to state that every sportsman in the United States and Canada owes him a debt beyond calculation.

The banding of ducks and geese by Jack Miner, and in later years by the Biological Survey of Washington, has revealed that there are three migration routes which the birds follow in their annual flights to and from their breeding grounds. One route lies east of the Mississippi, another west of the Mississippi and the Goast, went of the Rockles.

The ducks and geese banded by Jack Miner at Kingsville, Ontario, which is centrally located along the Great Lakes, are practically all reported shot ears of the Mississiph with the exception of the odd bird which has strayed across to the western side of that big river.

It has been Jack Miner's sanctuary and his activities at Kingsville that have saved a breeding supply for hunters, and especially those who enjoy their sport in Southern Illinois and the junction of the Illinois and Mississiphi rivers and eastward through to Carrituck Sound, Lake Mattamuskeet and other winter quarters.

Benefitted Greatly

Benefitted Greatly

The band records compiled by Jack Miner over a long period of years prove that the sportsmen along the Atlantic Coast and in the Eastern United States benefit very little from the activities of the duck or goose population of Western Canada.

The great value of the Jack Miner's bird banding activities is that it has given the people of the United States and Canada indisputable records of the number and percentage of ducks and geese cared for by the famous Canadian bird sanctuary at Kingsville that are shot in the United States. Jack Miner, as well as many other leading Canadian sportsmen, conservationists and public spirited citizens, feels that the sportsmen of the United States should, without hesitancy support him in a tangible way by raising sufficient funds to enable him to maintain his establishment and carry on his work.

At the present time hundreds of thousands of dollars are being spent in Western Canada by Ducks Unlimited, money which is raised in the United States to restore former breeding grounds and establish new one in Western Canada to raise ducks for the American sportsmen to shoot. If it is possible to raise such large sum among the hunters of the United States for this new project, there should be a few thousand dollars, available to assist Jack Miner whose activities have spelled success for nearly half a century.

In the Winter of 1983 alone Jack Miner had a floating population of able to assist Jack Miner whose activities have spelled success for nearly half a century.

In the winter of 1938 alone Jack Miner had a floating population of between 25,000 and 50,000 Canada geese for three months in the spring and three months in the fall, that were all fed by him and given a safe haven from the hunter's gun.

Last winter a flock of Canada geese number between 5,000 and 10,000 never entered the United States, remaining at the Kingsville sanctuary all winter. The increase from this flock alone will give the sportsmen in the United States this fall an opportunity to shoot an additional 10,000 to 25,000 eeese.

Miner's Fortune Spent

With these facts in mind an appeal to American sportsmen to maintain the Jack Miner sanctuary should not fall on deaf ears.

The result of close contact with Jack Miner and his work over a period of many years, contributors can be assured that any assistance which can be given will not only be gladly accepted but will, be expended to the greatest possible advantage. Jack Miner himself has spent his entire personal fortune on this work and has contributed his own time and that of his family to this great cause.

In a recent announcement it was pointed out that cheques should be made payable personally to Jack Miner, Kingsville, Ontario, and it was stated that to those who wish to secure a statement of actual financial conditions before large amounts are contributed, a sworn statement of the ditions before large amounts are contributed, a sworn statement of the bank handling the account at Kingsville will be mailed.

They have brought across the centuries a wealth of well-preserved articles of beauty and domestic use such as probably has been equalled only by the tomb of King Tut-Ankh Amen in Egypt.

They almost certainly belonged to a member of a ruling family in the little known days of Anglo-Saxon England. It is possible that this was the grave of King Raedwald, nick-maned "Raedwald the Cautious" because he is believed to have followed Christianity and Paganism at the same time.
